Fixing frequencies first: On 5G economic payoff Till the end, Lata Mangeshkar remained her own person in Budget speech

Finance Minister Nimala Sitharaman's Budget announcement that the Government proposes to conduct the "required spectrum auctions" in 2022 to facilitate the roll-out of SG mobile phone services in fiscal 2022-23 has understandably 2022-23 has understandable triggered speculation including about the feasibility of the timeline. The Government's keenness to expedite the roll-out was framed by Ms. Sitharrama as being propelled by an appreciation of the latest energrafic telecommunication by an appreciation of the latest generation telecommunication technology's ability to serve as an enabler of economic growth and job creation. Commenting on the Budget a n n o u n c e m e n t , Communications Minister Achuria Urickrown end TBAL Ashwini Vaishnaw said TRAI was expected to submit its was expected to SUDMIT its recommendations on the spectrum to be set aside for 5G by March, adding that the auction for the airwaves would be held soon after. While last week's flurry of auction for the alrwaves would be held soon after. While last week's flurry of announcements have raised the possibility that the next auction of telecom spectrum may be held within the next few months, there is little clarity on the approach the Government plans to take with regard to the crucial issues surrounding the introduction of 5G services. Foremost are questions around the particular frequencies the regulator is likely to Government's plans on pricing the spectrum, and most

Government's plans on pricing the spectrum, and most crucially, the very viability of the new technology, both for the telecom companies and the economy as a whole. With the financially stressed private telecom service provider South African Tourism Kickstarts

That 5G represents an exponential leap in technology is beyond doubt. However, most countries that have commercialised 5G so far largely find the technology still predominantly deployed as an upgraded replacement for 4G in terms of end use, with the industrial and public utility applications envisaged still at least a few years away. Also, for the new technology to work at its optimum potential the Government would need to not only offer the key operational frequencies including the below 1 GHz, the C-Band frequencies around including the below 1 GHz, the C-Band frequencies around 3.5 GHz, and the higher 26 GHz but also crucially enable the transport or backhaul of signals between the base stations and telecom operator's core network by offering no- to low-cost E-Band airwaves. With the COVID-19 pandemic having shown up the existing mobile networks' inadequacies in erado, especially in enabling the delivery of education to remote and rural enabling the delivery of education to remote and rural students, it may make the most sense to delay the introduction of 5G until policymakers are sure its economic payoff will outweigh the high cost.

Lata was one of the three daughters born to a well-known performer in Marathi theatre, Dinanath Mangeshkar. Her father recognised her talent early on, and began training her when she was only five. Her younger and very talented sister Asha Bhosle told the Dogri poet Padma Sachdev later how their lives changed when their father passed away suddenly. The eldest, Lata didi, was only 13. The family first went to stay with their mother's family 13. The family first went to stay with their mother's family in Thalner village in Dhule, then moved to Mumbai to a small house in Nana Chowk. Lata ji's initial years in the Mumbai film industry of the early '40s were full of struggle. Music directors used to the low d and comewhat hefull and

Another great composer of film music, Naushad, wrote about her: Watch her voice leap up like a ball of fire (Shola sa lapak jaaye hai, awaaz tau dekho!). In the '50s, Lata Mangeshka' was an undisputed star singing for all renowned composers: Shankar-Jaikishan, Naushad, SD Burman, Laxmikant-Yayatelal, Hemant Kumar and Madan Mohan. Her long and distinguished career is not a tragic tale of continuing to shoulder the burden of someone else's idea of how a woman should sing. She was a genuinely many-voiced singer who considered it an asset to be able to sing for a Madhubala, a Jaya Bachchan and even a Preity Zinta. Hers was a voice of a

But she was very much her own person. She did not follow the usual pattern of marriage, children and the possibility of a life long contention with a male who felt his masculinity threatened telt his masculinity threatened by an eminent wife. She chose, instead, to sing as and when and how she wished, and maintain her personal relationships with various men and women she cared for. She had little interest in theatrice. Her, lowe, for all for. She had little interest in theatrics. Her love for all things, from diamond jewellery to devotional music, was not a put-on act. Those aesthetics came naturally to her like to so many of our great musicians. But one admires her for, even as she pursued her music, rightly demanding that musicians be paid royalties, not be sent off with a one-time payment. If this created some disaffection between her and four bitchet male signers disaffection between her and a few big ticket male singers, so be it. Her innate understanding of her self worth remained subtle and capacious till the very end. Another loveable part of

Another loveable part of Lata Mangeshkar's life was her deep and genuine love for cricket. In the cricket establishment she found the action-man dimension perhaps of a father she had lost early in her life. Stories about her romantic dedication to one such legend were also rife over the years. But she chose not to marry for reasons we will never know. The truth or otherwise remained between them. She never cared to discuss it remained between them. She never cared to discuss it publicly and none of the columnists and society reporters dared ask her about it. She did make clear that she did not wish to be reborn. Ever. And that her favourite poet was Meera Bai who sang Mai mai, kaise jiyun ree (Oh my mother how can I survive)". "One should Mumbai daily. Of late, one sees a sudden swell in those who claim to have known her over the years and emphasise how she sang because Veer Savarkar urged her to sing or that singing a song like, Ai mere watan ke logo...was an ideal public display of true rashtra bhakti. From what one gathers about this one gathers about this unusually gifted singer, she abhorred histrionics or public displays of love or hate. She was among those like George Bernard Shaw who believed that patriotism is basically a conviction, that the bert that patriotism is basically a conviction that the best country is the one that one is born in. Professionally and personally, the marvellous weight of the pleasure her singing gives embarrasses hyperbolic tributes. Certainly, obituaries will call her "the last of a kind", the "Sur Saraswati" in hind film music or "the greatest female singer in the Bollywood firmament". For once, they will not be sopp clichés, for firmament". For once, they will not be soppy clichés, for once they will ring true.

So she played Eliza Doolittle to their Professor Higgins for a while. Hexibility is something young fatherless children learn early on in life. Lata did too. And the voice will invariably be Lata Mangeshkar's. It is in this context that Lata Mangeshkar's playback singing achieved its unique status. Much can be written about the tore and pitch of her voice over the years. But what is indisputable is the fact that only she could give expression to literally every situation or emotional register. It is not just the melody, but that precision about words and precision about words and emotions in her singing, that made her an ideal carrier of the totality of our lives. Someone

But most of all what it required was the creation of singers who could become everyone. The singer had to be a neutral enough medium so that they could become everyone. The singer had to be a neutral enough medium so that they could appear to be every actor's voice. But in a much more difficult act, the singer had to exude a kind of trust that they also became every listener's voice and the grammar of their remotion. Its, I think, for this reason, more than anything few singers. For every time you heard a voice you also wanted it to be familiar so that you could think of it as your # understatement. It is hard to imagine any comparable artiste, in the annals of any country, who so saturated the cultural, emotional and affective life of their nation. This is not just a statistical achievement. The tens of thousands of songs recorded in 18 languages, the total domination of playback singing for a half century, the ability to define a whole genre of music, the innovations of tonality, pitch and modulation, to define a whole genre of music, the innovations of tonality, pitch and modulation, would alone be formidable. But her impact cannot be measured in technical terms. A great artiste might give pitch perfect expression to a variety of emotions. Lata Mangeshkar went further: Her songs became the totality of our emotions to the point where it was impossible to think of an affective life outside of her songs. Lata Mangeshkar was coming of age when a new nation was coming into being. But a new nation needed a new grammar across the whole gamut of our lives.
